Summary

Goyan I. Existential-Analytical Review of Psychoanalysis. The article deals with the analysis of the existential-analytical review of philosophy of psychoanalysis. The existential-analytical review is established to have been directed onto the "psycho-dynamic conception" which attributes the substantial features to the subconscious sphere of motivation, with psychical activity being strictly determined by "the principle of satisfaction" which confronted the existing social limitations and prohibitions. It is accentuated that the will for meaning is ontologically more determining in personal motivation than Z. Freud's "principle of satisfaction". Keywords: intentionality, transcendentality, will for meaning, meaning of life, subconscious spirituality, consciousness.
