Scientific background is provided for the research of current issues of corruption crime registration by the operative units with aim to develop the appropriate concept and set of recommendations for improvement of current legislation and its application. It is stressed that research must be based on detailed examination and scientific analysis with further objective assessment of outcomes in terms of various legal sciences. Completion of this task requires identification of total amount of scientific data related to the research object and its systematization.

It is stated that subject of the chosen research topic and logical structure of search methodology determine the relevance of the abovementioned data differentiation (division into “general”, “specific”, “individual”).

During research of corruption crime registration by the operative units we concluded that category of “general” includes basic theoretical and practical provisions aimed at research objectives: definition of crime registration, its stages, forms and methods; definition of corruption crimes, classification, definition of operative unit and its main functions. This theoretical basis provides opportunity for the “specific” category to be thoroughly examined in terms of legal regulation, registration and tactics of corruption crime registration by the operative units (general and specific aspects (separate stages, forms and methods). Category of “individual” is integrated into the abovementioned (legal regulation, registration and tactics of corruption crime registration by the operative units).
