

PREFACE

Psychological Prospects Journal (PPJ) is one of the flagship journals in the field of Psychology in Ukraine. The journal publishes the cutting-edge Research Articles spanning on modern spectrum of the different branches of Psychology. This journal is the sample for the latest findings in cognitive, social, developmental, clinical and health Psychology.

The political and social situation in Ukraine increased the psychological problems among separate individuals and whole society. It demands the concrete ways of the solution of these problems and defines many tasks for researches and practitioners in Psychology. The journal represents articles employing novel research methodologies and the latest and most original techniques for analysis.

The journal brings together manuscripts with a variety of psychological issues of the individual (social and identification profile of separation anxiety during the treatment process of adolescents; teaching comprehension of verbal texts; personal profile of self-attitude in the structure of self-concept of students with high level of helplessness; sovereignty of psychological space from the personal maturity perspective; psychological mechanisms of human viability development in the counselling interaction; communicative and speech styles in students' interaction; life prognostication of patients with hypertension; methods of impact on child; emotional burnout of deprived personality; representation of negative and traumatic events in the individual memory; military trauma and combatants' rehabilitation), professional (perfectionism in the professional activity of the nurses; management of teaching stuff in the educational districts; professional growth of police officers) and social life in the modern society (social well-being as psychological phenomenon, psycholinguistic approach to the ethnic tolerance; social frustration in the students' professional security; interpersonal interaction in the family; civil identity and ecological consciousness under transforming circumstances; students' participation in the civil movement; techniques of ethnic conciseness development; reflective experience in the students' educational processes; professional development of future clerics; impact of communicative discourse on the political values; metaphor as a way of children's socialization; ethnocultural stereotypes of students in Volyn region).

The manuscripts in PPJ are selected according to their creativity, their focus on the urgent issues, the benefits and resources they provide to psychological theory and practice, and their appropriateness for future dissemination.

Thank you for collaboration!

Larysa Zasiakina, Editor-in-Chief