

PREFACE

Psychological Prospects Journal (PPJ) designed primarily for psychologists, yet of interest also for non-specialists concerned with current issues and the events in the field.

The scope of is PPJ is international and embraces a multitude of branches in Psychology built on the following pillars: Cognitive Psychology and Neuroscience, Clinical and Health Psychology, Social and Organizational Psychology, Developmental Psychology. PPJ also embraces a multitude disciplines connected with Psychology: political sciences, medicine, pedagogy, technology, history, sociology, and management of organizations. Another important segment of this journal includes articles on Mental Health: new researches, codes of ethics, protection and development, and prospects.

The journal represents articles employing novel research methodologies and the latest and most original techniques for analysis.

The journal brings together manuscripts with a variety of psychological issues of the individual (individual well-being, learning motivation in metacognitive monitoring reliability, emotional intelligence in the development of leadership skills, psycho-hermeneutic approach to self-acceptance as a factor of psychological well-being of the contemporary woman, factor structure of personal characteristics of the unemployed, psychosemantic space of preconventional, conventional and post-conventional moral consciousness of personality, religiosity and spirituality of personality); primary issues of modern Clinical and Health Psychology (ethical aspects of psychotherapeutic assistance of senior adolescents with different conceptions about relations with parents, professional self-realization as mental health factor of public service personell, internal pattern of disease in Clinical Psychology, psychotherapy of professional addictions in the context of EU Compass for mental health policy in organizations, implementation of the prevention and diagnostics of Clinical Psychology in the field of higher education, subjective well-being as an indicator of individual mental health, workaholism in the context of addictive behavior, psychophysical developmental disorders of early age children); foundations and applications of Neuropsychology (Neuropsychology of this century: prospects and challenges, PRISM Brain Mapping – neuroscience application in business coaching), main issues of Social and Organizational Psychology (entrepreneurial skills of employees, professional readaptation in the context of social mobility of personality, setting objectives as the basis of coaching, comparison socio-psychological characteristics of professional development of students of different specialties, social movement, social identity of deprived teenagers: from revitalization perspective).

The manuscripts in PPJ are selected according to their creativity, their focus on the urgent issues, the benefits and resources they provide to psychological theory and practice, and their appropriateness for future dissemination.

Thank you for collaboration!

Larysa Zasiiekina, Editor-in-Chief