Dear readers!

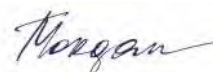

Economics is always present in our life either obviously or secretly. It is always around us: practically in every action and event, in every object – even in the seeming to be the least demanded by people.

Our life is accompanied with the law plainly, persistently and imperatively. In comparison to economics, jurisprudence probably does not have such natural origin based on the fundamental essence of human society – society of creation and consumption. But global and national social consolidation is impossible without legal regulations just like the politics as the mechanism of influence of people on economic processes.

Politics acts as the highest and the most comprehensive level of public relations management. At the same time all system of control in activity of human communities substantially consists of decisions and actions implemented on the level of separate organizations and their interactions. The organizational management itself defines final productivity of the majority of social initiatives...

Economics, law and management are so interconnected that the matter of priority importance of any of these branches of social life always has insoluble nature. Depending on specifics of social processes in various situations, economics, law and management in many variations act towards each other either as main aims or as supplementary instruments in the mechanism of problem solving... The theory of relativity is quite applicable to social institutes!
